The show is a musical comedy that follows High School, which will be performed Friday, Dec. 2, through Sunday, Dec. 4, at the Westminster Playhouse.

The show is a musical comedy that revolves around a group of people looking back at what life was like in high school, according to the director, Fine Arts Professor Miriam Mills.

“It is a warm, humorous, thoughtful and touching musical,” she said. “The music is lovely and the kids are delightful. They are working so hard and they do so in an interesting way.”

Among student-run productions, it is a unique experience that students are responsible for. “It’s all about the energy. It’s basically just a group of people coming together to play these fun improv games,” said Alpha Psi Omega president senior MariaCarmen Cusimano.

“There is a lot of fun going on in the audience,” said Alpha Psi Omega Improv Show director junior Miriam Bondarev. “It’s like a group of people who are interested in comedy, and they are able to create their own material, which has always been a lot of fun for everyone involved, said Cusimano. “It is a very much a creative and challenging experience for all.”

“It is an amazing experience,” she said.

“With their outbursts of laughter and joy, the audience can see the fun that is being had by the actors,” Cusimano said.

We don’t ever like to charge students for our events,” she said. “We do all the leg work.”

“We want to provide a fun event for all students,” she said. “That’s why we offer free music every week. We want to give students a chance to have fun and enjoy an awesome, free concert.”
