RIDER UNIVERSITY
LAWRENCEVILLE, NJ
2083 LAWRENCEVILLE ROAD

VOLUME LXIX, NUMBER XVIII APRIL 1, 2003

NEWS
Lots of sex in the briefs.

Features
It’s cool to pee your pants!

Opinion
Sorry, not feeling very opinionated this week.

Sports
Rider gets an official beer pong team. Finally!

Weekend Weather
Instead of providing you with an insightful look at this weekend’s weather, we decided to use this space to inform you, our readers, that next week we will run an issue dedicated to the ongoing war in Iraq. We encourage you to submit your opinions on the matter. We apologize to anybody offended at our decision to run the April Fools issue this week, in regards to the current circumstances at hand. And we apologize to anybody who is about to be offended by opening this paper. Thank you for understanding.

Rider Nudes
A reason to not pay attention in Friday classes since 1930

BY DARTH CIVITIVIS

The Editor of Tomorrow

Rider built on Indian burial ground?

By Darth Civitivis
The Editor of Tomorrow

Recently Rider has come under scrutiny from a Native American activist group who claim that documents have surfaced proving that the University was built on an Indian burial ground.

The American Natives’ Unitarian Society (ANUS) argues that when Rider moved its main campus from Trenton to Lawrenceville it desecrated the sacred graves of their ancestors. Former President John Kruk, however, said that the greatest of care was taken when moving the University.

“We at Rider understood the delicateness of the cultural boundaries while we were breaking ground in Lawrenceville,” he said. “In order to be as helpful as possible, we dug up each and every one of the graves, dismembered the bodies and re-buried all of them upside down for good luck,” he said.

However, Chief of ANUS Habooty Nabunghole said that Rider pays for the desecration of their ancestors’ burial ground even to this day through a curse placed on the students by the spirits of their people.

“Haven’t you ever wondered why nothing ever goes right around here?” Nabunghole said. “The spirits of the dead are exacting their revenge and until some kind of restitution is given to our people, residence halls will continue to smell, tuition will continue to rise, exams will get harder.”

At first, Baker’s story seemed to check out; after all, that is what those damn hippies do. However, when it came to light that Baker was the only individual with access to the greenhouse, the guilty party became obvious.

LPDJ escort Baker to See “ANUS” on page 2

BLAZE UNEARTHS PROF’S POT

Science building mishap leads to discovery

By The Dirty Sheisty Hick
Dumbest Editor Ever

A fire that broke out in the science building greenhouse early Monday morning led to the discovery of a University science professor’s personal “research.”

At approximately 4:20 a.m. Monday morning, security was dispatched to reports of smoke and a strange smell emanating from the vicinity of the science building.

“At first it seemed to be a small fire, and was immediately extinguished. However, a peculiar smell permeating the air led us to investigate further,” said Security Officer Bacon.

While searching the premises, security officials stumbled upon what appeared to be a large crop of marijuana plants.

After notifying the Lawrenceville Police Department’s faithful janitor (LPDJ) (the rest of the department was asleep with each other), security proceeded to contact the faculty member in charge of the greenhouse, botany professor Jerome Baker.

Baker, who was not on the premises when the incident occurred, at first denied any knowledge of wrongdoing, and attempted to shift the blame.

“It must have been those damn hippies. You know how those longhaired tree-huggers are,” said Baker.

At first, Baker’s story seemed to check out; after all, that is what those damn hippies do. However, when it came to light that Baker was the only individual with access to the greenhouse, the guilty party became obvious.

LPDJ escort Baker to See “Blaze” on page 2

Marijuana plants much like those discovered in the science building, but a lot better looking.