Blaze from page 1

campus for further questioning by the University’s new S.W.I.N.E. interdiction team. The team proceeded to beat Baker mercilessly.

It took a great deal of coercing in order to get Baker to divulge the details of his seedy operation.

“You’re getting warmer. Really warm, oh no, you’re cold again,” said Baker.

Finally, after hours of “getting warmer, getting colder,” a heated session of rocks, paper, scissors, Baker finally cracked.

“Fine, you caught me. So what are you gonna do now?” said Baker. “Damn The Man!”

Security determined that Baker had been cultivating the illegal herb for both profit and personal use. It was discovered that he had been running his operation for five years, right under the noses of Rider officials.

“We have determined that Dr. Baker may have cultivated as much as 800 pounds of marijuana during his time at Rider, and may have made as much as, well, um, a lot of money,” said LPD’s janitor.

Dr. Baker was immediately fired from the University and issued a letter of persona non grata.

Criminal charges were pending, however, Baker escaped police custody during a visit to 7-11, the purpose of which was to obtain a substance identified only as “Cheetos.”

He was last seen running (well, actually driving...lazy pothead) to Vermont.

Attention-grabbing headline goes here...

Highly relevant, timely, and well written news story, not having anything to do with Amiri Baraka, goes here...

Special News Section: Fun with Magic Eye