then they're going to see that this war is U.S. and Iraq. Brown feels that this war bring about great changes for both the conflict, no matter the result, is going to "lies and going in for oil," she added. They're going to hate us for this. They're going to think that we're just being bullied and going in for oil," she added.

Many students admit that the conflict, no matter the result, is going to bring about great changes for both the U.S. and Iraq. Brown feels that this war is going to compromise our whole way of life. "I think we're going to have suicide bombers here. When malls and things like that start blowing up, then we'll be scared. That's going to hit people and then they're going to see that this war is not just overseas," she said. "It's going to affect us. It's not just the troops that are being put in harm's way. It's the people here too. That's the scarcest part."

On the other hand, there are also those who are in support of the war and feel that military action was necessary. America has a role to play in the world to help create liberty and justice for all, according to junior Adam Yichye, who feels that the war will benefit both the U.S. and the Middle East. "The majority of the Iraqi people are unhappy and I agree that we should go in there and help them. The most powerful have an obligation to try and help the weakest," Yichye said. "Positive things will happen because we will get rid of the bad regime and the Iraqi people will have freedom to run their own country. Good will come out of it."

"Positive things will happen because we will get rid of the bad regime and the Iraqi people will have freedom to run their own country. Good will come out of it."

Residents in Kroner Residence Hall decorate their doors with pro and anti-war signs to demonstrate their feelings on the current situation in Iraq. While many students feel that the war will bring about positive changes, others feel that it will give birth to an even bigger conflict.

For the Cherie L. Anderson, students are forming strong opinions on the war. The Rider community is no exception. All over campus, students are forming strong opinions on the matter.

"Of course we don't want Saddam Hussein to hurt us or anybody else, but now even people that he has exiled out of the country are coming back to fight for him. We're all missing something and we don't know how other countries are perceiving our actions. A lot of countries are going to hate us for this. They're going to think that we're just being bullies and going in for oil," she added.

"The campus is just being a little too quiet about the whole situation. I know that none of my professors have talked about it and it would just be nice to take a little break to discuss what's going on," said Sullivan. "Even though they have counselors in the counseling center saying 'oh come out and talk to us about it,' I don't think a lot of people respond to that. The school just needs to lend a bigger hand to the student body because I don't really think that there's a lot of support out there."

On many college campuses, protests have been held to demonstrate opposition against the war. Sullivan said that while she respects protesters for being able to get their message across and show everybody that they are against the war, she feels that in the end they are only wasting their time. "Protesting is not going to change anything that's going on. No matter how many people protest the war it's not going to change the fact that the war is happening and that's it going to keep happening," she said.

One thing most can agree on is the hope that America's troops will return home safely.

"If we want peace we have to make sacrifices for it," said Yichye. "I believe that America is a very strong and powerful nation that knows what they are getting themselves into."

Students speak out about feelings on war

By Lacey Korevec

Features Editor

As the war with Iraq presses onward, national disunity and differences in opinion have been widening. The Rider community is no exception. All over campus, students are forming strong opinions on the matter.

Reluctant to believe everything that she sees on the news, freshman Gabrielle Brown said she expects the media to report that things in Iraq are going well, while many students feel that the war will bring about positive changes, others feel that it will give birth to an even bigger conflict.

"I think more people are being killed because you can't believe what you hear. It's a very deceptive war," Brown said she expects the media to report that things in Iraq are going well, while many students feel that the war will bring about positive changes, others feel that it will give birth to an even bigger conflict.
