Students who were looking for a thrill on Mischief Night did not have to look very far. House on Haunted Hill Part 2 opened its doors to students from 9-11:30 p.m.

The haunted house was the sequel to last year's, which was regarded by Residence Hall Association (RHA) as a success. However, from the look of things, it seems as though this year's follow-up has managed to go above and beyond its original.

Hill's RHA President Anna Pindulic played a large role in putting the House on Haunted Hill together.

"It was really successful this year. Rob Glejzer, Resident Director of Hill, dresses up as an evil clown to scare passing victims. A lot more people than we thought showed up and all of the residents got really involved," she said.

"This year was scarier because we had more people popping out of things." Hill's Resident Director, Rob Glejzer, was the pioneer who had the idea to create Haunted Hill last fall.

"This is something we did last year and were trying to make an annual thing, RHA made that happen," Glejzer said. "I think this year's was scarier and a lot more creative. The first year was really like a trial run and this year was the real thing."

This year's program was put together by about 15 students.

"The haunted house was opened for local children from 6-8 p.m. and then for Rider students later on. This year though, unlike last, no children came."

"We did a lot of advertising and we talked to parents about it. It had a lot to do with the fact that it was raining. Also, it's a long walk from the parking lot and it's dinner time," she said.

"We wanted to do this for local children, but it was not enjoyable since none came. After going on the tour, though, Noah admitted that she was very impressed with what she saw.

"I came this year just to see what it was like and I'd come again just to see what they do next year," Noah said.

Freshman Kim Gunther was another student who had nothing but good things to say about the haunted tour.

"Honestly, I thought it would be corny," Gunther admitted. "But it wasn’t at all. It screamed like ten times."

"Next year they should make it longer, maybe from the second floor to the first," she said.

Who knows what RHA has in store for next year's House on Haunted Hill Part 3? According to Pindulic, this year's turnout was much better than last year's.

It will be interesting to see if next year's tour can outdo its predecessors.
