Swimming and diving show strokes of brilliance

By Joe Haubrich

If you get a chance to enter the swimming facilities in the Maurer Center any time soon, take one look at the wall of records and notice all of the empty holes. Those holes will soon be filled with the records snapped by Rider's men and women's swimming and diving teams last season.

It was a memorable season in which Rider's men's swimming and diving team won the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) championship and in which the women's team finished solid as well.

This season should be as good, or maybe even better than last as a result of outstanding recruiting and the return of key veterans, according to head coach Tomaso Hilinski.

"The way things are looking, by this time next year, the wall at the Coppola Pool may be filled with the records and notice all of the empty holes. Those holes will soon be filled with the records snapped by Rider's men and women's swimming and diving teams last season.

It was a memorable season in which Rider's men's swimming and diving team won the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) championship and in which the women's team finished solid as well.

This season should be as good, or maybe even better than last as a result of outstanding recruiting and the return of key veterans, according to head coach Tomaso Hilinski.

"The way things are looking, by this time next year, the wall at the Coppola Pool may be filled with the records and notice all of the empty holes. Those holes will soon be filled with the records snapped by Rider's men and women's swimming and diving teams last season.

It was a memorable season in which Rider's men's swimming and diving team won the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) championship and in which the women's team finished solid as well.

This season should be as good, or maybe even better than last as a result of outstanding recruiting and the return of key veterans, according to head coach Tomaso Hilinski.

"The way things are looking, by this time next year, the wall at the Coppola Pool may be filled with the records and notice all of the empty holes. Those holes will soon be filled with the records snapped by Rider's men and women's swimming and diving teams last season.

It was a memorable season in which Rider's men's swimming and diving team won the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) championship and in which the women's team finished solid as well.

This season should be as good, or maybe even better than last as a result of outstanding recruiting and the return of key veterans, according to head coach Tomaso Hilinski.