Editorial: Reflections on a difficult and uncertain year

As we anticipate the start of summer and the closing of another academic year, it is important to reflect on some of the lessons we have learned. Not only in the academic sense, although that is important, but also on what we have learned about life.

Every notable event that takes place throughout history leaves its mark. There is always a small piece that will remain a part of each individual for the rest of his or her life. It may go unnoticed, like a person instantly judging someone after seeing a turban on their head. Or it may remain within the realms of consciousness, as seen by Sept. 11 fear of flying.

As a nation, we were witnesses to many tragic events this year. We watched the ill-fated Columbia plummet to the ground. We feared for whoever would become the next random sniper victim. We waited nervously as our nation counted down the minutes to war with Iraq, and we watched Baghdad crucify, while all the nations security alert system bounced back and forth from orange to yellow, warning us all of national danger. This year has truly been a milestone, as we entered a war and prepared to finish a task that we began over a decade ago.

The current war we are involved in has been televised like no other in the past, allowing us to literally stare at buildings as they are about to be bombed, using right vision and other high tech communiqué, and has supplied us with pictures of foreign lands that have lasers bouncing around them circling places where Iraqi troops might possibly be hiding.

It does not matter that disastrous events such as these may have taken place in Maryland, Columbine, New York City or even Iraq. We still live through them, whether in person or by watching them through a television screen. They affect all of us, as Americans and as human beings.

For every horror that we have witnessed, it seems there has always been a miracle standing by to help settle the score. Elizabeth Smart, who was presumed dead, was surprisingly found, unharmed, proving that we should never lose hope. Our nation sobbed tears of happiness as we watched American Prisoners of War return safely to the arms of the ones they loved ones.

We have also experienced many events within the Rider community. We said goodbye to a beloved school president and took part in the election for a new one, all the while marking a significant year in Rider’s history. We have argued with our friends — and each other — with controversial issues, such as hosting productions like The Vagina Monologues and Children of Fatima, and of course, any loyal Rider News reader knows that you can not count on both hands the number of opinionated articles that were printed concerning the visit from the notorious Amiri Baraka.

But long before any of those issues even arose, the same students who argued with one another gathered together, holding candles in remembrance of those that were lost on Sept. 11, and again as they mourned the untimely loss of two fellow classmates.

Fall movies breeze into theaters

After an August that will see yet another remake of Freaky Friday, a one-on-one confrontation between Freddy Krueger and Jason Voorhees and a sequel to Jeepers Creepers, audiences will have a fall lineup to desire for, including such big names as Hugh Grant, Denise Richards and Rowan Atkinson and will open on Nov. 7.

Jersey Girl—The first view Askew production not to feature Jay and Silent Bob arrives in theaters Nov. 7 and will star company-veteran Ben Affleck. The film, which will co-star Jennifer Lopez and Liv Tyler will feature a plethora of actors from Kevin Smith’s other films including Jason Mewes, Matt Damon, Jeff Anderson and Jason Biggs.

Spider-Man (Superman: The Movie) directly covers this topic about a group of archaeologists (including Paul Walker of The Fast and the Furious and Frances O’Connor of Bedazzled) who find themselves trapped back in time in 14th century France until they stop a group of soldiers that are ploting to assassinate a famous scientist. The film is usually a great theme to play off of, this idea has been done, redone and over done enough to say that, when it comes out on Nov. 26, it better be good enough to justify its hackneyed plot.

The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King—Although The Lord of the Rings did not get to be desired for, The Two Towers had it all and hit the nail perfectly on the head as an excellent continuation. Coming off that momentum, the final chapter in the series hits theaters on Dec. 17.

After an August that will see yet another remake of Freaky Friday, a one-on-one confrontation between Freddy Krueger and Jason Voorhees and a sequel to Jeepers Creepers, audiences will have a fall lineup to look forward to that might entice a few more viewers to hit theaters than the shoddy summer roster.

Scary Movie 3—After a weak first installment and a sequel that probably accounts for four positions on a top five list of the worst theatrical films ever produced, Scary Movie 3 will hit theaters on Oct. 3. Without the Wayans brothers, who made the first two at least somewhat watchable. The only plausible verdict: If a movie is so bad that even the out of work Wayans brothers turn it down, that’s a clear indication that viewers need to stay away.

The Matrix: Revolution—The highly anticipated final chapter in The Matrix trilogy hits theaters Nov. 5 with a Terminator-esque story of a war breaking out between humans and the machines that once enslaved them.

Love Actually—Liam Neeson and Laura Linney headline this film about ten separate, but intertwining love stories set out of London. The comedy will feature a plethora of actors from Kevin Smith’s other films including Jason Mewes, Matt Damon, Jeff Anderson and Jason Biggs.
