Freshman Angela Fuoco advances the ball during a game early in the season. The Broncs won the Northeast Conference Championship last season, their second title in three years. With all the starters returning except one, they return as the team to beat.

By Jared Vichko
Sports Editor

Athletes never forget losses. When the Broncs took the field on Sunday, Nov. 3, for the championship, their foe was a familiar one. Last year, Rider emerged victorious 2-0, but today the Broncs were determined to have the last laugh.

With the end of the season just around the corner, Angello told the team, “We’ve been working hard since preseason, and all our hard work has paid off.”

The road to the championship was not a smooth one, however. On Friday, Nov. 1, in the semi-finals, the Broncs took on Sacred Heart, a team that they had split with in the regular season.

When the Broncs took the field on Sunday, Nov. 3, for the championship, their foe was a familiar one. Last year, Rider emerged victorious 2-0, but today the Broncs were determined to have the last laugh.

The Broncs did just that, scoring 25 seconds into the second overtime. Ang deflected a shot from freshman Ally Hunter, sending Rider into the championship game.

The NEC Championship is beginning to become déjà vu, with the Broncs and Quinnipiac meeting for the third consecutive year. The game flowed back and forth with no team gaining a particular advantage. Finally, with 10 minutes to go in the first half, Rider broke the scoreless tie on an unassisted goal by freshman Angela Fuoco. Less than a minute later, the Broncs added an insurance goal by Ang, her NEC record 18th.

When Ang broke free past the defense and caught the goalie off guard, she knew there were no other options but to put the ball in the net. "I knew there were no other options but to put the ball in the net," said Hunter. "We put our whole season together in the past two games." Athletes never forget, and this season a memory was made that will never be lost.

By Jared Vichko
Sports Editor

Athletes never forget losses. When the Broncs took the field on Sunday, Nov. 3, for the championship, their foe was a familiar one. Last year, Rider emerged victorious 2-0, but today the Broncs were determined to have the last laugh.

With the end of the season just around the corner, Angello told the team, “We’ve been working hard since preseason, and all our hard work has paid off.”

The road to the championship was not a smooth one, however. On Friday, Nov. 1, in the semi-finals, the Broncs took on Sacred Heart, a team that they had split with in the regular season.

When the Broncs took the field on Sunday, Nov. 3, for the championship, their foe was a familiar one. Last year, Rider emerged victorious 2-0, but today the Broncs were determined to have the last laugh.

The Broncs did just that, scoring 25 seconds into the second overtime. Ang deflected a shot from freshman Ally Hunter, sending Rider into the championship game.

The NEC Championship is beginning to become déjà vu, with the Broncs and Quinnipiac meeting for the third consecutive year. The game flowed back and forth with no team gaining a particular advantage. Finally, with 10 minutes to go in the first half, Rider broke the scoreless tie on an unassisted goal by freshman Angela Fuoco. Less than a minute later, the Broncs added an insurance goal by Ang, her NEC record 18th.

When Ang broke free past the defense and caught the goalie off guard, she knew there were no other options but to put the ball in the net. "I knew there were no other options but to put the ball in the net," said Hunter. "We put our whole season together in the past two games." Athletes never forget, and this season a memory was made that will never be lost.

By Jared Vichko
Sports Editor

Athletes never forget losses. When the Broncs took the field on Sunday, Nov. 3, for the championship, their foe was a familiar one. Last year, Rider emerged victorious 2-0, but today the Broncs were determined to have the last laugh.

With the end of the season just around the corner, Angello told the team, “We’ve been working hard since preseason, and all our hard work has paid off.”

The road to the championship was not a smooth one, however. On Friday, Nov. 1, in the semi-finals, the Broncs took on Sacred Heart, a team that they had split with in the regular season.

When the Broncs took the field on Sunday, Nov. 3, for the championship, their foe was a familiar one. Last year, Rider emerged victorious 2-0, but today the Broncs were determined to have the last laugh.

The Broncs did just that, scoring 25 seconds into the second overtime. Ang deflected a shot from freshman Ally Hunter, sending Rider into the championship game.

The NEC Championship is beginning to become déjà vu, with the Broncs and Quinnipiac meeting for the third consecutive year. The game flowed back and forth with no team gaining a particular advantage. Finally, with 10 minutes to go in the first half, Rider broke the scoreless tie on an unassisted goal by freshman Angela Fuoco. Less than a minute later, the Broncs added an insurance goal by Ang, her NEC record 18th.

When Ang broke free past the defense and caught the goalie off guard, she knew there were no other options but to put the ball in the net. "I knew there were no other options but to put the ball in the net," said Hunter. "We put our whole season together in the past two games." Athletes never forget, and this season a memory was made that will never be lost.